

Santiago del Estero

Santiago del Estero is an Argentine city, capital of the province of Santiago del Estero and head of the capital department. It is the oldest of the existing cities in the country.

During the 16th and 17th centuries, the city was the origin and center of the armed and religious conquest of the Spanish Colony in what is now Northwest Argentina . From it emerged the currents that founded the main cities of that region of the country. In addition, it has folklore as a typical cultural heritage. For these reasons, it was officially declared "Mother City of Cities and Cradle of Folklore".

The city is the main administrative, financial, and commercial center of the province. Its building and commercial growth in recent years, gives it a movement and a physiognomy typical of urban centers, giving it all the characteristics of modern and thriving cities. It also has a rich historical heritage, embodied in some residences of ancient architecture and in its museums. It has places of tourist and historical interest, such as the Cathedral, the Bicentennial Cultural Center, the Forum, the house of Andrés Chazarreta and the Convent of Santo Domingo, custodian of one of the replicas of the Holy Shroud.

Foundation

The city was founded on June 24, 1550 by Juan Núñez de Prado, from Peru, with the name of El Barco, in honor of his hometown in Spain, El Barco de Ávila. Núñez de Prado was forced to move the city the following year, in 1551, and then had to move it again in 1552. The habitants of this third city of El Barco were ordered by Francisco de Aguirre, from Chile, to move to a new location and, together with settlers that he himself brought from Chile, he founded a fourth city, but with another name: Santiago (for the Apostle Santiago) del Estero (because it was next to a lagoon near the Río Dulce) on December 25. July 1553. With Núñez de Prado, in addition to Spaniards, numerous Yanacona Indians arrived, speaking Quechua, the language that gave rise to the current Santiago Quichua, widely spread in the province.

SdE Technological Node

The Secretariat of Science and Technology (SCyT) is located and manages the facilities of the SdE Technological Node , a modern meeting point and convergence model in Santiago del Estero, between science, technology, education, the productive area, R+ D+i (research + development + innovation), and the local entrepreneurial sector.

The SCyT is in charge of the necessary articulation for the implementation of these policies outlined by the Provincial Executive. The task is carried out in coordination with interdisciplinary actors that make up the necessary ecosystem to structure a new paradigm in our province, enabling a fertile socio-institutional framework for the growth of an awareness that looks at development.
